The reality show is seeking musicians ages 10 and under. There will be an open audition process where children across the United States will submit video footage of their talents for the executive producers to review. The executive producers will screen the initial field of applicants and choose a group of semi-finalists. These semi-finalists will then have the opportunity to travel to Harmonie Park Studios in Detroit to audition LIVE for the producers. The American public will then choose the finalists by voting online at the Harmonie Network website (<http://www.harmonienetwork.com>). The producers will then choose Julian's band members from the selected finalists. Once the band is formed, they will record a single produced by Michael J. Powell and Mark Pastoria.

"This reality show has tremendous viewing potential," says Michael Powell. "The American public is already enamored with reality television. I think music and talented young kids combined will be mass appealing. The success of Disney and Nickelodeon is very much music driven and the charm, talents, and unpredictable hilarity that will come out of 'Finding Julian's Band' is inevitable."
